The Eye Institute Provides Vision Care to Nearly 200 Students in Chester-Upland and William Penn School Districts

Elkins Park, Pa. – The Eye Institute (TEI) of Salus University provided comprehensive vision care to nearly 200 students in Delaware County through its “Looking Out for Kids” (LOFK) charity initiative.

The LOFK initiative helps provide vision care for underinsured and uninsured children in Philadelphia and its surrounding communities. Early diagnosis and treatment of vision problems in children is critical. One in four children suffers from visual difficulties, which can adversely impact their school performance and impede social development.

“A child cannot be successful in school without good vision. Vision problems create a disadvantage but with our program, we can remove that barrier and help students on their path to success,” said Dr. Brandy Scombordi, pediatric optometrist and coordinator of TEI’s School Vision Programs.

During the 2017-2018 academic year, TEI provided eye care to children in in the William Penn and Chester-Upland school districts with the University’s Mobile Unit. The “Big Red Bus,” as it is affectionately nicknamed, includes all the essential equipment needed to complete a comprehensive vision exam. In both districts combined, 184 eye exams were performed and more than 157 pairs of glasses were dispensed.

Since its inception in 2007, the LOFK program has brightened the lives and enhanced the educational performance of more than 17,000 children locally.
