Salus University Brings Springtime to January with Art Exhibit

Elkins Park, PA – Salus University is hosting a “Springtime in January” art exhibition in its new D’Arrigo Family Gallery located inside the Hafter Student Center. The exhibition, which is currently running, will be open to the public until March 13.

The exhibit features colorful and vibrant images of spring, designed to brighten the winter months. The exhibit was curated by Elynne Rosenfeld, who partnered with Salus University to fill the new gallery space with a variety of themed shows throughout the year.

“For Springtime in January, I wanted to create a sense of warmth and sunshine for the eyes during the darkest months of the year,” said Rosenfeld. “Though art can make deeper statements, and though some of the art shown in the future will do just that, I thought it important to have a soothing, easy to digest theme for a first show.”

Six different exhibits will be featured at Salus this year. All artwork displayed in the exhibits will be from local artists in Philadelphia and its suburbs. The next show will involve Salus University students, faculty and affiliates by giving them the opportunity to showcase their personal artwork. Each new exhibit will kick off with an opening reception.

“These exhibitions are a wonderful opportunity for both our students and the surrounding community because they will have a space to showcase their work,” said Dr. Michael H. Mittelman, president of Salus University. “We are proud to join the other universities that have art galleries and look forward to providing a more enriching experience at our own university.”

The exhibit is open during the week from 6:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. and on weekends from 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. All artwork featured in the show is available for purchase by contacting Rosenfeld at 610-246-8097 or elyroal@gmail.com.
